

Our Responsibility

As parents, we have a responsibility to those who depend on us. It makes sense to utilize all financial resources, retain government benefit eligibility for those who need it and protect the financial futures of the ones we love -- rather than leaving those things to chance and good luck.

After You're Gone

“I do not charge for any calls or intake meetings with fellow parents and extended families of individuals with disabilities. By taking this approach in assisting other families, I make certain that anyone who may need my services can take advantage of my expertise -- regardless of their financial status or situation.”

Special Needs Planning

The fact is that only one out of ten parents of children with disabilities have done their planning sufficiently.

As a parent and advocate knowledgeable in special needs planning techniques, I have a moral responsibility to children and adults with disabilities and special health care needs who need their government benefit eligibility protected and a lifetime of person-centered supports available to them. I do this by assisting their parents and family members through the necessary steps to accomplish these essential goals.

I help other families make deliberate, conscious decisions to protect those who depend on them – because I’ve found that most parents don’t get around to making these choices until they meet with someone like me who is knowledgeable in this area and will cause them to think about it.

Person-Centered Planning

All parents worry, regardless of their children’s needs. However, you can find relief that comes from developing a sound, person-centered plan for your son or daughter that gives you a permission slip to do many things. Permission to worry less, spend your hard-earned savings on yourself during retirement and have peace in knowing your child will outlive you with a lifetime of resources and quality supports in place. This planning allows you to leave your personal handprint behind for not only your lifetime, but more importantly... for theirs.

Your Confidential Intake Meeting

To schedule a confidential intake meeting to learn how to secure the financial future of your son, daughter or other family member with a disability, please contact Diann Jones. She does not charge any fees for intake meetings to help fellow parents plan for a lifetime of quality care and person-centered supports for their loved ones.

During your two-hour intake meeting, Diann Jones will (1) answer any questions you may have about her or the advocacy she provides to the community, (2) discuss your specific goals and objectives, (3) explore the current financial and legal strategies you are employing, (4) outline specific ways she can help you plan for the future of your loved one with a disability, and (5) review other ways she can be a resource to you and your family.

During subsequent meeting(s), Diann will provide you with an estimate on the amount of financial resources needed to accomplish your specific goals, assist you with communicating your wishes to future caregivers via a Letter of Intent, and can help you organize and implement your financial plan.

While Mrs. Jones speaks nationally on the subject of special needs planning, all meetings are conducted in her office in Middletown, Delaware, where she has access to all of her resources to make the best use of the time she spends with families.
